

#ANDMETOO

Survivor Rights and Employer Duties in the Precarious Workplace

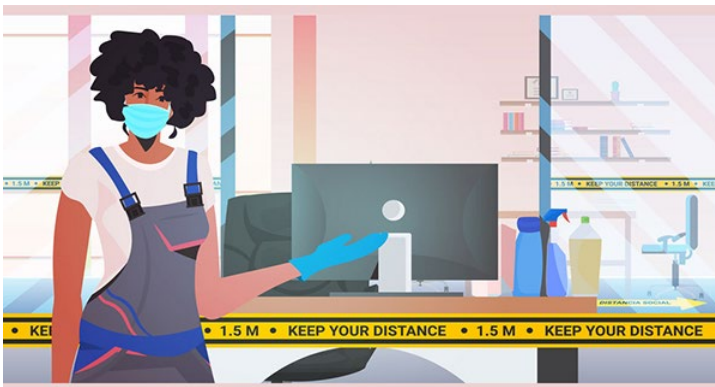

For those who have experienced or are experiencing violence in the workplace, knowing how and where to seek support can be overwhelming, frightening and confusing. But it doesn't need to be.

#ANDMETOO, offers public legal education for women and gender-diverse people working in hospitality and service industry who are experiencing or at risk of experiencing sexual harassment in the workplace.

Join us for training

Build on your organizational awareness for safe workplace practices and develop policies that strictly enforce a no tolerance mandate for sexual assault and harassment. By participating in this trauma-informed, culturally appropriate training you will:

- Learn what your rights are in the workplace; and what the duties and legal responsibilities are of employers;
- Acquire resources and discover supports that are available to those experiencing sexual harassment;
- Understand how individual lived experiences - that are diverse and complex - shape the reality of those working in this sector; and
- Learn how to negotiate with employers on your rights in difficult workplace environments.

For information on the project, or to register your organization for training, please visit the Clinic's website at <https://www.schliferclinic.com/andmetoo-ple/> or email outreach@schliferclinic.com

#AndMeToo: Survivor Rights and Employer Duties in the Precarious Workplace is funded by the Department of Justice. We are proud to work in collaboration with the Centre for Research and Education on Violence Against Women and Children (CREVAWC) at the University of Western